This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

The present volume includes records of exchequer for the six years from 1589 to 1594; rolls of accounts of the bailies ad extra for all of these years have been preserved, as have also rolls of the accounts of the custumars and bailies of burghs. The account of the customs for 1589 is a general one, the customs still being farmed out to lessees; but those of the remaining years all show the intromissions of the several local custumars. This reversion to the older system of having this part of the revenue paid directly to the comptroller indicates that the crown must have found the farming either unprofitable or impracticable.[1]

The series of comptroller's accounts for the period of the volume is also complete, except that no account remains to show this officer's intromissions for the terms of Martinmas 1589 and Whitsunday 1590, and that a leaf has been lost from the beginning of the preserved account for the year ending Whitsunday 1589.

The appendix contains what remains for the same period of the books of responde, both for the crown lands and for the kirk lands recently annexed to the crown, together with such occasional records of miscellaneous proceedings in exchequer as are found drafted or copied on the blank leaves at the ends of the various responde books. For the year 1589 and for part of 1590 no respondes relating to the crown lands have been preserved. This defect, however, can to some extent be supplied from the existing Index in libros responsionum, from which have been taken the entries that are printed in this volume referring to the missing respondes.[1] The series for the kirk lands is virtually complete. A few entries are awanting at the beginning, owing to the loss of several folios from the commencement of the "Responde Book of Church Lands, 1589-1613," preserved in the historical department of the Register House; but the deficiency has been supplied from a "Responde Book, 1588-1655," preserved in the office of the Director of Chancery, the similarly occasioned defects of which are made up partly from a separate fragment preserved in the same book and partly from an exoneration or discharge appended to the account rendered by Robert Douglas, provost of Lincluden, who was by an act of the Privy Council in 1588 made responsible as treasurer of the new augmentations for the returns from the lands in question in place of the sheriffs, stewards, and bailies usually charged.[2] It is worthy of remark that the various responde books printed in the present volume do not contain, as the earlier books did, notes of the granting of commissions of justiciary for the apprehension and trial of criminal offenders, although three such commissions are noted in the above-mentioned index at the outset of the entries for 1589.[1] The absence of such records may perhaps be taken as indicating that as time went on the administrative business of the crown was becoming more and more specialised, and that a clearer line of demarcation was being drawn between the fiscal and the criminal jurisdictions of the great officers of state who sat as lords auditors of exchequer.

I.

During all this period the office of comptroller was held by David Seton of Parbroth. His accounts show that in these years the crown was always pressed for money. They instruct by the dull evidence of figures that chronic impecuniosity of King James VI. which has so often provoked the lively comments of historians and romancers. Yet, while the accounts in the present volume show many traces of the expedients to which the king resorted in order to meet the calls made in these years upon the royal exchequer, they also reveal the fact that among his officers at least the comptroller looked after himself. A prominent novelty in the comptroller's accounts is the recurrence of entries of extraordinary payments by way of allowance for upkeep of the comptroller's office. In the account of 1589 the comptroller charges himself with £1000 received from the chancellor and with £4533 6s. 8d. received from the Earl of Angus at the king's command "in help and support of the necessar chairgis of the comptaris office";[1] and the same account records an allowance to him of £1464 "by and attour his ordiner fee, and that be com-"mand of his majesteis precept this present yeir, in "respect that it wes verefeit be the maister hous-"hald that he wes nocht chairgeabill in the buikis "of houshald for his meitt as utheris the compt-"rolleris of befoir wer."[2] A similar entry occurs in the accounts for the following years.[3] Perhaps the most remarkable evidence, however, of the straitness of the royal treasury is to be found in a deliverance by the lords auditors appended to the account of 1590–1.[4] From this it appears that there was then, on a balance of the revenue and expenditure of the crown, a deficit of some £8000. This being so, the regular creditors of the crown are formally deprived of their legal right to do diligence for the sums due to them—although the comptroller has taken allowance of them in his account—until the deficit has been paid by the king to the comptroller. The special reason assigned for this suspension of the common law rights of creditors is that the comptroller has at the royal command taken on himself the charge of the royal household and stable. The deliverance, which is signed by the chancellor and four of the lords of checker, speaks loudly of the pecuniary anxiety of the nation. That the ordinary creditors of the crown should have their legal remedies cut off must have seemed all the more oppressive at a time when, as will be seen, taxation was more than usually severe.

It seems clear, also, that the situation was complicated by contentions and dissensions among the great officers of state themselves; for in the act of parliament by which the Privy Council was nominated in 1592 a clause occurs which specially ordains the four ordinary officers—the treasurer, the comptroller, the collector-general, and the secretary—to agree among themselves as to what duty and business properly appertains to each in his office. Such a provision would scarcely have been needed had everything gone smoothly in bringing in the crown revenues and dealing with the royal property. It may perhaps mean no more than that parliament did not find it necessary precisely to define the duties of the respective officers; but it is significant that a further provision was made in the same statute that, when these officers cannot agree, they were to be "haldin to underly the jugement of the council present for the time."[1]

II.

Before noticing some taxes special to this period that have left their traces upon the records, it is proper to remark the appearance in the comptroller's accounts of the proceeds of an exaction not hitherto recorded in them, viz., "the impost and dewitie aucht to our soverane lord of all wynis arivit within this realm." The comptroller charges himself with having received from this source in 1590-1 the sum of £15,693 14s. 4d.[1]; in 1591-2, sums of £9417 4s. 2d. and £3507 2s. 6d.[2]; in 1592-3, £5479 6s. 4d.[3]; and in 1593-4, £10,378 8s. 1d.[4] These are the net returns of the duty, "all fies and chairgeis being deducit." The absence of any statement of the expense of ingathering the duty is the more regrettable because economists are agreed that the best index of the national feeling in regard to any imposition is the amount of the cost of its collection.

The most conspicuous tax of these years, however, is that raised to furnish the king's tocher, to give that name, as is done in an entry in the accounts,[5] to the provision levied to meet the charges incident to the king's marriage.

This event was the most conspicuous public occurrence during the years under consideration. To it are to be referred several unusual entries in the records printed in the pages that follow, and it will accordingly be proper here to note those of its attendant circumstances to which the entries in question refer. The marriage was first celebrated by proxy at Elsinore in the autumn of 1589, the king being represented by his ambassador, the Earl Marshal. His bride was Anna, daughter of Frederick II. of Denmark. The new queen and the Earl Marshal soon set sail for Scotland; but, being storm-stayed, had to put back to Opslo, from which port the frosts prevented their sailing. Meantime the queen was impatiently awaited in Scotland. A letter under the king's hand exists, dated 30th August 1589, addressed to Patrick Vaus of Barnbarroch, commanding exceptional supplies of "fatt beef "and muttoun, ox feete, wyld foulis, and venison "or other stuff meit for this purpose" to be supplied to Walter Neish, master of the royal larder, for the entertainment of the Danes accompanying the queen. A special tax of £20,000 was raised in September from the burghs for the same purpose. Still the queen did not arrive, and at last the king resolved to cross the sea in person to bring her home. Royal commands were issued to assemble in Leith roads all ships in the Fife coast harbours to form a fleet "toward Norroway," wind and weather serving. On 28th October the king made the Norwegian coast, found his way to Opslo (now Christiania), where the marriage was again celebrated in November, this time by Mr. David Lyndsay, a Leith minister who had gone over in the royal train. The collection of documents[1] relating to the marriage which instructs these particulars gives extracts from the treasurer's accounts, in which the officers and servants of the king's household who figure so often in the comptroller's accounts appear as receiving payments to provide themselves with new habiliments in celebration of the marriage. These extracts have been supplemented by three entries the source of which is not stated by their editor, who encloses them in brackets, thus leaving it to be supposed that they are blanks supplied in the treasurer's accounts.[2] They are, however, taken from the comptroller's account for 1590-91, now printed in this volume.

The first of these entries is in point here because it shows that Patrick Vaus of Barnbarroch accompanied the king to Norway, and that a sum of £666 13s. 4d. was paid to him by the comptroller for the furnishing of his ship.[3]

The king remained in Norway for six months, and then returned with the queen, the homeward voyage landing them at Leith on 1st May 1590. The queen was crowned on the 17th; and the public entry of the sovereigns into Edinburgh made on the 19th. Their palace of Holyrood House, it is interesting to note, was not in a fit state to receive them on their arrival; and £1000 of the £20,000 raised from the burghs was applied for "bigging and repairing" it.[1]

This £20,000 granted by the burghs appears to have been part of a general tax of £100,000 raised to provide for the royal marriage. Already in 1587 parliament had empowered a commission consisting of six representatives of each of the lords temporal, lords spiritual, and commissioners of burghs to "treat, consult, deliberate, and conclude" upon such taxation as would sufficiently and honourably meet the charges of the king's marriage.[2]

In April 1588 the act of taxation was passed. Referring to the prior commission, it enacts that £100,000 is to be raised, half the sum by Martinmas of that year, £25,000 by Martinmas 1589, and £25,000 by Martinmas 1590. The money is to be contributed by "all sorts and degrees of "persons without exception according to their "rents and hability pro rata." It is interesting to note that some difficulty in collection was occasioned by the recent transferences to the nobles of the kirk lands, and the erection of such estates into temporal lordships. It was now enacted that such estates should in time coming rank with those of the barons for purposes of taxation. It is clear from another provision of the act that abuses in the collection of the tax were anticipated; for it is expressly provided that no precepts for the payment of the tax shall be good unless they have been signed by ten persons of each of the estates. The special object of this provision is stated in the act itself to be "to the effect the same taxt may "be collected to this necessar and honourable use "(i.e. the king's marriage), and no otherwise "applied nor disponed upon." But it will be seen from the evidence of the rolls that this business-like stipulation on the part of parliament was not strictly adhered to by the king and his fiscal advisers.

The comptroller's account for 1590-1 bears as one of the items of charge that the comptroller had received £9930 17s. from Master John Colvill of Strathrodie, the collector of the taxation granted by parliament for the marriage. The entry itself[1] does not show to what purpose the money was applied, but this may be gathered from a reference to it in the title of the account,[2] which states that £10,000 of the marriage tax had been assigned to the comptroller "in support of the chairgis and burding of his office."

In the same account[3] appears on the discharge side this entry, "Item to Daniell Boill for his "laubouris and expensis in passing diverse tymes "to Glasguew, Perth, Abirdene, Dunde, Sanct-

"androis, Anstruther, Pettinweeme, Kirkaldie, and "Dysart, for collecting and inbringing of the anual "of the kingis grace toquheir, being in the ballies "handis of the saidis burrowis, within the tyme and "space of this compt, £55." This entry discloses how the funds furnished by the marriage tax were applied. The money was lent out at interest to the burghs. Accordingly we find the accounts of the return from this investment appearing as a new division of the comptroller's account. Thus in the accounts for 1590-1,[1] for 1591-2,[2] for 1592-3[3] and 1593-4[4] there is a special charge of the "anualrent cummand of foure "scoir auchtene thousand pundis, deliverit to "the thesauraris of the burrowis following, payand "ten pundis for every hundreth." The sum of the whole loan is in each case stated to be £98,000, a figure which suggests that the whole return from the marriage tax, less the cost of its ingathering, say £2000, was funded and lent out to the burghs at ten per cent. The amounts taken by the several burghs are interesting as constituting a scale of their relative prosperity in these years. Edinburgh took £40,000; Dundee, £20,000; Perth, £12,000; and Aberdeen, £8000. Glasgow, Dysart, and Kirkcaldy each took £4000; and Haddington, Anstruther, and Saint Andrews, each £2000.

III.

The accounts bear traces of other expenditure in connection with the king's marriage than that shown in the foregoing entries in reference to the taxation. There are a number of entries of payments to Danish servants coming to this country in the train of the queen, and the comptroller's account for 1590-1 contains some items of their salaries. The Danish cuppers and carvers to the queen, George Eppin and Christopher Carioth, had each £400 a year. So, too, had her minister, John Sering, and her secretary, Calixtus Schein. Her cook, John Freis, took for himself and his two children £200; her tailor, Paul Rey, £100; her four pages £22 each, and her three lackeys £12 each.[1] These items are given separately in the account for 1590-1. In the accounts for the years 1591-2 and 1592-3 the charges of the queen's Danish servants are settled by a lump payment of £1200 made to the masters of the king's wardrobe,[2] and in the comptroller's account for the year 1593-94, Sir James Anstruther, master of the king's household, receives a payment of £400 for the fees of the queen's Danish servants for the term of Martinmas 1593.[3] It would therefore seem that either the queen's establishment as a whole or the wages of particular servants must have been reduced. It is doubtless also to the queen's Danish connection that we may refer the payments, not directly connected with her, of £133 6s. 8d. in 1590-1[1] and £66 13s. 4d. in 1591-2[2] for the board of John Andro or Andreis, a Danish scholar, who was put under the charge of Master Hercules Rollock, the then master of Edinburgh grammar school, to be maintained and educated. No doubt it is also to the king's having entered the married state that we must ascribe the unusually numerous entries of payments made for plenishing of the royal kitchen and pantry.[3] A suggestion that the coming of the queen and her ladies must have occasioned some relaxation of the strictness of good accounting seems to lurk behind the payment in 1590–1 of £180 to one Fleming, a baker of sugar, "for certane succour confectis and "sweit meit furneist to bancatis maid to his "majestie,"—an entry significantly marked by a marginal note expressing the views of the lords auditors—"Ordanis the lyik of this to be put in "the dyett buik in tyme cuming."[4]

The charges of the royal house grew still greater when the establishment was called upon to meet a further incident of matrimony. A prince, Henry Frederick, Duke of Rothesay, was born in Stirling Castle on 19th February, 1593-4. The crown's advisers had not awaited the actual occurrence of this interesting event before making provision for it. In January 1593-4 an Act taxing the country in another £100,000 had been passed on the preamble that the money was needed "anent the blessing of God shown to his highness, "this whole realm, and nation, in granting to him "succession of his body to possess his crown when "he shall call him to his mercy from this life, "the Queen, his dearest bedfellow, now shortly "approaching to the time of his birth, to the com-"fort alsweill of his hieness as of all his true and "faithful subjects." The money is accordingly to be raised, half at the following Easter and half at Martinmas thereafter. £50,000 was to be contributed by the spiritual estate, £33,333 6s. 8d. by barons and freeholders, and £16,666 13s. 4d. by the burghs. The machinery of collection is more precisely defined in the statute than was that of the prior exaction.[1] The prelates were directly charged, with recourse against their vassals, and were, in default, to be put to the horn and suffer escheat. For the barons' and freeholders' share every pound land of old extent in the country was to contribute thirty shillings; the sum to be levied in the first instance by the fiscal officers of the crown, the sheriffs, stewards, bailies, and their deputes. The burghs' part was to be paid by the bailies after a stent roll had been made up by assessors elected ad hoc. Sir Thomas Erskine of Gogar was appointed collector-general of the tax. The only exemptions from the exaction were the lords of Council and Session, the members of under-prelacies, and the rents assigned to schools and colleges for educational purposes. The comptroller's accounts throw little light on the matter beyond the incidental recording of payments made for furnishings to the banquet given at Stirling on the occasion of the prince's baptism, and for the entertainment at the king's charges of ambassadors from Denmark who had come to this country to attend the ceremony.[1]

IV.

While the various taxes and their incidence are matters of which indications would naturally be looked for in the accounts of exchequer, the accounts, as in prior years, have here and there some interesting or suggestive trace of the general history of the nation. The most prominent national movement was the progress of Protestantism, with the accompanying struggle of the Roman Catholics to recover their lost ground. Religious matters, however, leave comparatively little mark upon these records, such notices as occur being in the main merely supplementary of those noted in a prior volume[2] in connection with the transference of the patrimony of the church to the crown.

Such notices apart, the progress of Protestantism is evidenced by the entries in the records of the diversion to new purposes of the former revenues of the church. And the transference, for example, of the annuity formerly paid to the bishop of Aberdeen to the master of the grammar school in Banff[1] may be pointed to as a more apparent sign of advancing civilisation than the distribution of kirk lands for military or political service to the crown.

The establishment of the reformation in religion, however, was not accomplished without a temporary strengthening of the spiritual forces of superstition. One interesting item to be found in the records printed in this volume relates to those trials for witchcraft which stand out among the more prominent events in the history of Scotland during 1590 and 1591. The comptroller's account for 1590-1 has the following entry:[2]—
"Item to James Neisbet, javellour of the Tolbuith
"of Edinburgh, be his majesteis precept, for
"furnesing of Richert Grahame and utheris
"witcheis, £200."

This Richard Graham has suffered somewhat in the estimation of history for lack of a critical study of the records in which his name has been preserved. He has passed into tradition as a wizard or warlock not to be thought about except with pious horror. Some part of this effect is due to the fact that the writings from which a knowledge of him is derived are either records of criminal process or the work of contemporary churchmen who professed belief in the infernal powers ascribed to him. Even in his own day there were men, more enlightened than their age, who refused to believe in the existence of witches and wizards, and ascribed the belief in them to imagination or a melancholy humour. It was against such rationalists that King James, five or six years later than Graham's day, wrote his dialogue on demonology. The danger of such opinions as theirs was no doubt great at a time when a king called them damnable, and argued, with whatever lack of logic, that those who defended necromancers were thereby betrayed to be themselves of that profession.[1] But the charge of witchcraft has affected unfavourably towards Graham a modern historian beyond the reach of superstitious authority, for Professor Masson, in referring to the notices of the witchcraft trials that appear in the Privy Council Register, sums up his view of Graham thus:—"Grahame seems to have been a thorough scoundrel."[2]

What is there against him? His name first appears in the articles of dittay against Agnes Sampson, the wise wife of Keith, who was tried for witchcraft on January 27, 1590-91.[3] The article runs thus:—"Item, fylit, upoun her awin "confessioune, that sche, be airt of wichcraft, saillit

"to ane schip, quhair thair wes ane uncouth woman, "and the Irsch tailzeour and his wyffe wes princi-"pallis thair; and that Richard Grahame wes ane "uthir of the principallis quha had wrocht mekle "mischief." This may possibly be interpreted as a charge of consultation with a known necromancer, the penalty of which crime was death under the Act 1563, c. 9.[1] But it contains no suggestion of anything against Graham which could affect his estimation in the mind of anyone who did not believe in necromancy.

Another article of the indictment against Agnes Sampson may in passing be noticed here, although it does not refer to Graham, because it mentions, oddly enough, a comptroller, and throws some light upon the way in which charges of witchcraft were constructed. This[2] sets forth the convention of a witch's sabbath at the kirk at North Berwick, at which the devil himself presided and about a hundred persons made homage, the men by being turned nine times, the women six times, "widderschinnes about." On the roll being called by the devil, every one answered to his name; but, "Robert Greirsoun being namit, "they ran all hirdie-girdie and wer angrie; for it "wes promisit that he sould be called 'Robert the "Comptroller alias Rob the Rowar' for expreming "of his name." It is odd to find the designation of the comptroller figuring in such a connection. Does it not suggest that the charge may have been framed by some one having a knowledge of the fiscal administration, and desirous of prejudicing the prisoner by imputing scandal of magnates? Agnes Sampson was found guilty and condemned to be strangled and burned. In most cases the verdict of an assize may be taken as a certification of the facts which it finds proved. But the verdicts in these trials come under a double objection. In the first place, they find the naturally impossible proved. In the second place, they were not free verdicts. The next trial reported by Pitcairn,[1] that of Barbara Napier, shows how an assize could be influenced. It is the more in point here because Richard Graham's name occurs in connection with it. Barbara Napier was charged upon several counts, two of them involving Graham. In the first the charge was "for con-"sulting with Rychie Grahame, ane necromancer "and abusar of the people, in seiking of help at "him to hir sone, and gratifeing him thairfore with "thre elnes of bombesie and fyve quarteris of "broune. This was dwn in Johnne Ramsayis hous, "outwith the West Poirt of Edinburgh; incontrar "the tennour of the Act of Parliament maid thair-"anent; att the quhilk time sche inquyrit at the "said Rychie Grahame, gif the king wald cum hame "or nocht." The assize convicted of this charge, but acquitted of others, among which was one of "consulting with the said Rychie for ane stollin "dowlet (? dowblet) of umquhile George Ker, her "husband." But the majority of the assize was at once charged with "manifest and wilful error, incurring the panis of perjury." The king himself sat in judgment on them; and rather than go to trial on this charge they came "simpliciter into his highness' will," whereupon the king pardoned them. It is significant that the minority in this assize consisted, as Pitcairn notes, of "the maister of the ailsellar, the crelman to his "majestie, and David Seyton in Fowlstruthir, pro-"bably his brother or relation." Who can doubt that such verdicts were mere expressions of the king's will?

So much the records tell concerning Richard Graham. Further particulars concerning him are to be gathered from the contemporary historians, Spottiswoode and Calderwoode. Spottiswoode narrates[1] that Richard Graham, when apprehended as a sorcerer, confessed that the Earl of Bothwell had consulted with him to the same effect as in the consultation with the wise wife of Keith, as to inducing an evil spirit to make away with the king. A confession of a prisoner convicted of witchcraft is, however, of little value when it is remembered that such prisoners were put to torture. A royal commission for the examination of witches, granted this year, October 26,[2] puts it thus—"The persons wilfull or "refusand to declair the veritie to putt to tortour "or sic uthir punischment to use and caus be usit "as may move thame to utter the treuth." The worthlessness of this particular confession is specially brought out by a consideration of a letter which Bothwell circulated among the ministers of the kirk early in 1592. After discussing other points, he goes on[1]—"Resteth onlie Richard "Grahame to affirm against me; and he hath a "warrant of his life weill subscribed. But the more "he be assured of his life the more dishonour to the "estat, and his depositiounis are the more suspi-"cious . . . I am able to prove that not eight "dayes before he accused me, he said these words "to a gentleman of good place and fame: 'What "sall I doe? I must ather dee, or lee of noblemen.' "Yea, his owne brother, and some of your owne "number, sall be witnesses heirof, if need be."

Graham's confession against Bothwell, assuming it to have been made, did not save his life. He was strangled and burned at the cross of Edinburgh in February 1592.[2] So far as the records show there was nothing against him but what was raised by superstition. What can have been the nature of the actions that involved him in so evil a reputation? Some notion of them is perhaps to be gathered from the charge, already cited, in which Barbara Napier is said to have sought his help on behalf of her son. In the same direction points another passage in Spottiswoode's history, which tells how, when the Earl of Angus fell sick and his physicians found his disease "not to proceed from any natural cause," Graham had offered to cure him. The Earl, when apprised that Graham was suspected of necromancy, refused his assistance, with the remark that his life was not so dear to him that he would be beholden for its continuance to any of the devil's instruments.[1] It is not unreasonable to suppose from these passages that Graham may have been known to have effected cures of persons given up by the accredited medical science of his time, and so have acquired his repute for supernatural power. This was "the head and front of his offending," so far as the historical evidence shows. Charges of witchcraft are generally found accompanying charges of heresy when prosecuted by the church, or of treason or other political offence when prosecuted by the crown. Graham's case is peculiar in this, that wherever his name occurs it is in connection with circumstances of "naked consultation," or "simple advising" as it was called. It seems to have been on his reputation and not on specific acts that he was condemned. But to assume now that he was a malefactor is scarcely less just than to hold, with his benighted contemporaries, that he raised the devil or helped to cause the storm which stayed the Queen's arrival.

LIBRI RESPONSIONUM SUPER TERRIS ECCLESIASTICIS.

LIBER RESPONSIONUM SUPER TERRIS ECCLESIASTICIS corone annexatis, incipiendo a tempore annexationis, et continuando usque ad primum diem Novembris, anno 1590. RESPONDE BOOK 1588-1655.

Harum responsionum computum redditum fuit apud Edinburgh, decimo nono die mensis Decembris, 1590, per venerabilem virum, Robertum Douglas, prepositum de Lynclouden, novarum augmentationum thesaurarium.[1]

[1] The Liber Responsionum of Church Lands, 1589–1613, preserved in the Historical Department of the Register House, wants several folios at its commencement. The following entries, which partly supply this deficiency, are taken from a RESPONDE BOOK preserved in the office of the Director of Chancery, of which, however, the first four folios are also awanting. The names of the lands contained in these four missing folios and of their former ecclesiastical superiors are here supplied from an "exoneration" or discharge appended to the account rendered by Robert Douglas abovementioned. These lands are :—

Beochis, Litle Smeithtoun, and others, Dunnemoch,	Croceraguell Abbey.
Ardmillane,	Quhithorne Priory.
Ridway,	Melros Abbey.
Sauchoip,	Hadingtoun Priory.
Sclaittis,	Bishop of Aberdeen.
Smalhame,	Dryburgh Abbey.
Darnick,	Melros Abbey.
St. Marie Ile, Quhitfauld,	[St. Marie Ile Priory.]
Denmylne, and mill-lands thereof,	Lundoris Abbey.
Westir Foullis,	Mwnimusk Priory.
Patoun, Walkmilne of Poltoun,	New Abbey.
Corshous,	Kelso Abbey.
Nether Brumrige,	Haliwod Abbey.
Logane,	Melros Abbey.
Torquhen,	Bishop of Sanctandrois.
Tullichedele,	Inchechaffray Abbey.
Tibbermure,	Sanct-Colme Abbey.
Tibbermure,	Bishop of Dunkeld.
Burray, Iles of Slattay and Swynnay,	Bishop of Orknay.
Eister Craigtoun,	Inchechaffray Abbey.
Vicar's glebe of Symontoun, vicar's glebe of Dundonald,	Vicars thereof.

A fragment of a folio of the record, containing a part of the responde for the lands of Darnick and the responde for the lands of Denmyln, is preserved between the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth folios of the Chancery record. It runs thus:—

. . . mensure patrie in optionem solventis, £4 2s. monete de feudifirmis totarum et integrarum terrarum et ville de Darnik, cum pertinentiis et pendiculis earundem subscriptis, videlicet, lie Smythiscroft, McQuharreis land, Tylehous, lie Fiemaisterisland, Marsley, Perefauld, terrarum officiarii, prati sachriste, et Scralingland, cum decimis suis inclusis, existentium in manibus supremi domini nostri regis termini Sancti Martini ultime preteriti sasina non recuperata; necnon pro 9 bollis
